To whom it may concern:

I am writing to summarize my experience at the American Speech Language Hearing Association (ASHA) National Convention this fall. I am grateful for the experience and the funding provided.

The ASHA convention is one of the largest in our field, and attending this conference offered the time to grow both as an audiologist and educator. I also had the opportunity to present a one-hour presentation with my colleague on an ongoing SoTL project we are working on.

While in Boston, I attended talks focusing on student growth and ways we can support them as faculty. For example, giving time and encouraging them to apply for scholarships. I plan to share this information with our department as well as continually share resources with students in our department.

Giving the SoTL presentation offered me the chance to talk about the discipline with others from around the country. We shared ideas and have action steps to continue with our project. Departmentally, I plan to share with other the resources we have available at our university as well discuss more in depth ideas for SoTL projects to continue to enhance our teaching and student learning.

Thank you again for providing funding. My experience in Boston at the ASHA convention was insightful and granted new ideas to share with others locally.
